Was Garfield a Better Man Than Blaine?
Why, then, should respectable republican voters and newspapers that supported Garfield reject Blaine?—[The Sun.]

The answer to this is very plain. In the first place, none of the evidence incriminating Garfield was over his own signature and he was able to show that even the celebrated check for $329 was payable to "O. A." and not to "J. A. G." No such damaging confessions as the Mulligan letters were ever found in his correspondence. In the second place, it is transparent to everybody that Mr. Blaine is a man worth at least some hundreds of thousands of dollars, accumulated on his frugal salary since entering Congress, while Gen. Garfield's means never rose above those of an honest public man. The contrast between Garfield, leaving his modest place as teacher of a Western academy, raising a regiment and going to the front, and letting his personal fortune drift, while he served his country laboriously in the field and in Congress and Blaine, who went on to Washington first as a claim agent and has prospered handsomely, is too gross to be overlooked. Mr. Blaine's transactions in stocks were on a large scale. They were not all successful, but he did not risk his reputation for stock dealing in blocks of less than $25,000.

One of the men who have come out against Mr. Blaine is John C. Harrison, of Indianapolis, the government director of the Union Pacific Railroad, who found that the corporation had for some hidden reason paid Mr. Blaine $61,000 for the value of a lot of depreciated railroad bonds. The officers of the road denied this, of course, but they were not likely to dispose of their own characters and Blaine's too by confession.—[Springfield Republican.]

A Political Trap
The tariff legislation of 1883 was one of those ingenious devices by which the cunning republican managers have several times got the advantage of the innocent and unsuspecting democrat.

At the time that tariff was enacted there was every prospect that the democracy would carry the country in 1884. The most natural means of destroying the prospect and of dividing and defeating the democracy was found in the tariff. The act of 1883 was devised and passed for the purpose.

In this trap the statesmen of Kentucky and Illinois entered with eagerness. Heeding the old democratic issue of reform, they adopted in their stead the new issue framed for them by the republicans. They determined that the reconstruction of the tariff should be their one, absorbing, exclusive purpose. Upon this issue they organized the House of Representatives. They devoted to it more than five months of precious time. They divided their party into two contending factions; and finally, when the test came, their scheme failed, their bill was defeated, and thus the democracy was left in the trap set by the republicans.

Such is the result of running a great party upon such issues created for it by its antagonists.—[N. Y. Sun.]

BLACK JACK AND THE MILITARY.—The idea that Gen. Logan is a favorite of the soldier boys, for having stood by them and given them offices, is a mistake. With a single exception, all the important federal appointments in Chicago have been given to others than soldiers.

It was for reasons of this character that Illinois was not solid for Logan. At home he is not the favorite of the soldiers. He took sides against a soldier candidate for an Executive appointment, backed by a petition more numerous than any similar document ever has, and procured the appointment of a personal favorite Logan, like other bosses, has his favorites, and they are seldom soldiers; and to them he is faithful. In this he has manifested an extreme selfishness, which has brought him under a heavy fire from the ranks of the G. A. R. But it is to be said in his favor that he was not a contractor or a beneficiary in the bounty schemes, as Blaine was. Blaine is rich, while Logan is poor.

It is safe to say that Mr. Blaine will never write a letter of acceptance that will compare with Mr. Tilden's letter of declination. However this document may be accepted by the democratic party it is certain to increase and intensify the esteem in which Mr. Tilden is held—to warm the corner in the heart of the great organization in which he abides. Great always and wise and far-seeing, Mr. Tilden's power and fitness as a leader never appeared to better advantage than in this letter, and it is in the complete sense a justification of the confidence reposed in him by his party.—[New York World.]

Ministers, Lawyers, Teachers and others whose occupation gives them but little exercise, should use Carter's Little Liver Pills for torpid liver and biliousness. One is a dose.

CRAB ORCHARD, LINCOLN COUNTY.

—J. Shaw Edmonston keeps on hand the very best brands of flour. Call and examine it before purchasing elsewhere.

—Wheat harvest is almost on hand and generally a good average crop. Corn is looking a much better color and growing fast since the warm weather, after the past refreshing rains. Grass was never finer in this section.

—Scott Farris arrived at the race course here on the 17th with three young sires, which he expects to prepare for the fall meetings. He reports that he has bought out the other heirs' interest in the Ed Farris property and will likely move to it.

—There is some talk of resurrecting the Dramatic Society. We hope it will be done. It is a pleasant pastime for the young people, besides they could make it profitable for the College and we understand there are several young ladies who say they will take a part and what is better, "act."

—Lucian King sold to R. H. Bronaugh 72 year-old steers at $32.50 per head, and Jesse Fox sold to the same party 10 head of same class of cattle for $33 per head. Jesse C. Fox bought of various parties in this neighborhood a lot of butcher cattle for which he paid from 3c to 4c per lb., consisting mostly of cows and heifers.

—At a meeting of the board of trustees of our High School on Saturday evening last the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: R. H. Bronaugh, Pres.; G. W. James, Treas.; W. K. Buchanan, Sec. Their regular meeting will be the first Tuesday in each month. Application for a male teacher is now the order of the day. None but experienced teachers need apply.

—Mrs. Samuel Jones, after a long and painful illness, departed this life on the 13th inst.—Died at 10 o'clock p. m. on the 13th inst., H. W. Farris, an old and highly esteemed citizen. He was for years an honored member of the county court. He had been confined to his room and most of the time to his bed for several months of heart disease and although his death has been almost daily expected, it was still a great shock to his family. He was sitting up in bed talking with his family in a very cheerful manner, when his heart refused longer to perform its functions and without a moment's warning his spirit was ushered into the presence of the God who gave it. When we say that he was one of the kindest of neighbors, truest of friends and most indulgent husband and father, we speak from our personal knowledge. His remains were interred in the family burying-ground, witnessed by a large crowd of friends and relatives. We extend to his aged and bereaved widow our heart-felt sympathy.

Who Wears the Breeches.

This being the time of year when the male sex is getting into new coats and trousers, it is perhaps well to sound a note of warning to those of the sex who are married men. Every new suit that a married man gets into must be criticised by his wife. Now, strange to say, while women are experts as to all the mysterious things that women put on, they have not got the ghost of a conception of what should go on a man. They have their say, all the same, and are very certain to discover something wrong with any new suit of masculine attire that may come into the house. In case of a new suit of clothes and a wife, let the wearer stand firm. Gently, but with full determination, let him listen to his better half. Not a word that she says must be acted upon. One of the feminine schemes for destroying the happiness of a man in a new suit of clothes is to assert that the new trousers, while not at present too short, will soon be so. Of this criticism the wearer should especially beware. Trousers of the right length, when altered to make the legs longer, at once lose all their shape and can never be restored to their original symmetry, which, under the most favorable circumstances, is but fleeting. There used to be a frightful looking man who wore caps and trousers made by his wives, but this form of slavery has gradually disappeared. The present feminine interference with new store clothes is a sort of clinging to the old system. Let every man, as above advised, stand firm, and even this may in a few more seasons follow in the path of the old despotism. A man would better wear his trousers at half-mast than to longer submit to feminine domination in a matter that is in no way feminine. Courage, brethren! Let us show the female sex who it is that is wearing the breeches.—[Louisville Times.]

The latest mathematical puzzle in England is said to be this: Two ladies met three ladies, they all kissed; how many kisses were exchanged?

Exit Hargis.

Kentucky has cause for congratulation in the retirement to private life, this year, of Thomas F. Hargis. With never a reason to be particularly proud of him, the people of the State have had abundant reason for wishing to have removed from the highest position in their judiciary a man without respect for the honor or dignity of his office. The cunning of the professional politician and a series of fortunate accidents, rather than any sort of real merit, first brought Hargis into prominence. The moral support of the overwhelming majority in the State of his party for awhile strengthened him. But politics in Kentucky has not yet reached point at which some degree of merit and of decency is not needed to retain men in important positions. No signal ability has been shown by Judge Hargis in his work upon the bench, while his repeated meddling with petty politics in his native section has disgusted all right-minded citizens.

The bare nomination of Hargis, after a heated contest of many days in the convention at Owensville, in which he had the advantage in the organization of the convention, placed him upon the appellate bench. The famous Green-Hargis libel suit, in a Louisville court, called the attention of the whole State to the new Judge and the failure of the plaintiff to establish the charges which had led once to the defeat of Hargis at his home—and which were, by no means, disproved before the court—rallied about the defendant that support which always comes to a man supposed to have been unjustly persecuted. But something more than a vindication at the hands of a court is needed to make a man great, a fact which has dawned gradually upon the people of Kentucky. Higher motives are demanded in a Chief Justice of the State than the gratification of his personal ambitions and the avenging of private grievances by political intrigue. Doubtless Judge Hargis has been made to feel the change of public sentiment which has robbed him of its moral support, and it is not improbable that a realization of his loss of power led him to determine not to be a candidate for office again.

With the entrance of this man into the State Senate thirteen years ago there began a remarkable career; it must be admitted, and a career full of energy, perseverance and seemingly commendable effort. But there remains to be pointed out one achievement during these thirteen years, to which Kentuckians in future can refer with pride or satisfaction. Rather, the latter end of Hargis' political life is worse than the first, and if his rumored threat to enter into the current canvass in the Mt. Sterling district is carried out, the people of Kentucky will be unjust to themselves if they fail to publicly ensure him. It is fortunate for the retiring Judge that he resumes private life with an unstained personal character, and that his adherence to his friends at all times promises to be returned in kind. Let us hope that we shall not have another Hargis on the bench in Kentucky.—[Louisville Commercial.]

The following story comes from Chicago. "When the opera came to Chicago," said the head of "the retail," in a large dry good house, I noticed there were two or three expensive lace shawls sent home on approbation and returned the morning after the performance. This set me thinking, and when Mrs. B. came in the day of an opera night and asked to have one of the most expensive wraps sent home to have a look at, I just skipped out to old Swag's, the ticket speculator, and bought seats immediately behind those of Mr. and Mrs. B. When I came in a little later, there was Mrs. B. seated in front of me with the elegant lace wrap sent home in the morning over her shoulders. When she turned I greeted her politely and said "I was delighted the wrap had suited her. She looked unhappy during the performance, but the shawl was not returned to the store, and I charged my opera ticket to the expense account."

A good scare crow may be made by suspending an old barrel between two posts in such a way that it will be moved by every passing breeze. A better way to frighten away the sagacious birds is to take a large bottle, knock off the bottom and suspend the top to a slanting pole by means of twine. Fix a short string to the cork and let it hang down inside the bottle. This, with a nail or two on its end, will make a strange noise for most of the time—the nails striking the inner surface of the bottle.—[Chicago Times.]

Paster's cruelties as a vivisectionist and experimenter on living animals have been justified by his discovery of a thorough antidote for hydrophobia, by the simple inoculation with virus obtained from rabid animals. It is a demonstration of the wisdom of the old saw that the hair of the dog is good for the bite and the homeopathists will have some interest in the discovery.

"I've just sold Thompson two buildings on Wabash avenue," said a Chicago real estate dealer to a friend. "He must have plastered them with a pretty heavy mortgage," was the reply. "No, he paid cash to the full amount." "Paid cash? why, he's a poor man." "He was until last week; but he tended a hotel bar during the convention."

Writing of the Trappist at Gethsemane, Ky., a correspondent says: "When a monk dies, no needless coffin encloses his breast, but, wrapped in his circular, with his cowl drawn over his head as in life, he is buried. Each grave is covered with myrtle and has a black wooden cross bearing the name of the departed inmate. At the foot of each grave is a little stool, where the father who conducts you kneels to pray for the soul of the departed. At the end of the row is a new open grave, which will receive the next body, and which constantly helps the father to 'remember death.' There are no qualifications for the Trappist order. Any man who will obey the rules may stay seven years, giving his labor to the community and his thoughts to God, and, if he does not like it then, he may withdraw. If he concludes to stay he takes the perpetual vow. The sick and the weary are all here. Few desert, while many have been here for years bound to the world and all its little convulsions. Some of them do not know who is president, and the echo of Guiteau's pistol-shot died at the outer walls. The abbey contains a fine library of religious works, among which is a bible printed at Lyons in 1532."

A COLLEGIATE EDUCATION.—Young Man (departing for college).—"Well, father, good-bye. You may expect to hear from me often, and I trust that on my return you will find that I have not been ungrateful of our self-sacrificing efforts to provide me with an education. Good-bye!"

Father (with emotion).—"Good-bye, my son, good-bye."

Young Man (Three months later. Arriving from college).—"Ah, Governor, how delighted to see you. Bah Jove. Beautiful weather this, don't you know? How the folks. Doomed glad to get home, &c., &c."

The old gentleman thinks of bringing suit against the college.

A curious device of journalistic enterprise has been hit upon by the Bonapartist Petit Caporal, which informs its readers that in order to prove the interest it takes in their welfare, it will place at their disposal, on and after June 1, two eminent physicians of the faculty of Paris. These doctors will be attached to the staff of the newspaper, and will give gratuitous consultations to the subscribers and their wives.

The woman who has always been carefully protected, whose life has always been bright and free from care, may be very sweet and lovable, but she lacks character. Gold in its primitive state may be pure and precious, but its real value and beauty are developed by the crucible, the hammer, and the sharpness of the graver's tools.—[Lda Harper in Terre Mail.]

THE STORY OF A HAMMOCK.—An Indiana girl was swinging in a hammock when a man passed her on horseback with a gun across the pomel of his saddle. The horse stumbled and jarred the gun. It went off and hit the girl in the hammock. Her mother, who was in the kitchen washing dishes, was not hurt.—[Boston Post.]

Rusk never said truer words than these: "If you want knowledge you must toil for it; if you want food you must work for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil and not by self-indulgence. When one gets to love work, life is a happy one."

So frequently do we hear of men of high social standing betraying their trust and spreading ruin about them, and so rarely do we hear of their being called to account for their misdeeds, that the very tolerance of these things act as an encouragement to others to "go and do likewise."—[Baltimore Sun.]

"Oh, don't propose to me now," shrieked a Philadelphia girl, as her lover dropped on his knees and seized her hand. "Don't pop the question now," she screamed; "don't, don't, don't. If I say yes you'll want to kiss me, and I've been eating onions."

The Shelby Sentinel generously says: "We do not wish to prejudice the country against Mr. Flower." And it may be added, the great one said, with similar generosity, to the rhinoceros, "I don't want to hurt you."—[Rhinehart Argus.]
